Ties With U.A.R. Resumed

DRITAIN and Egypt have p resumed diplomatic ties. This marks the end of one of the most bitter and controversial periods in Britain's relations with the Middle East. The wounds caused initially by Egypt's seizure of the Canal and later by the British assault on Port Said have far from healed. Nor is there any! likelihood that they will heal completely before the passing of this generation. But the decision appoint diplomatic representatives to each other's countries will at or made the subject of com- action. pensation.

Diplomatic relations, however, must not be governed by national animosities and prejudices.

T was not surprising that Mr Selwyn Lloyd's statement to the House should have been greeted by. Labour taunts and jeers. And many more than opposition members feel particularly aggrieved that Britain has waived its claim to compensation for the Army bases in the former Canal zone. These were worth £50 million. the Canal operation had a more satisfying ending, the spectacle of the Foreign Secretary eating his hat might have been less humiliating. But it is not the time now to dwell on the past. It is time to swallow pride and accept the fact that we live in a world of equals in which the needs of Britain her Commonwealth have to be harmonised with the needs and rights of

World Air Routes

By PETER WOON

London, Dec. 1. A conference of Commonwealth airlines aimed at winning Commonwealth supremacy on the world's air routes is being planned by the Minister of Aviation, Mr Duncan Sandys.

The conference, which will probably take place in London next spring, is expected to set up a permanent council to encourage air transport throughout the Commonwealth.

Cheaper air fares agreed, if necessary, outside the International Air Transport Association would be a keynote of the cooperation between Commonwealth airlines and is being extended now. Last week Boac linked up with Trans Canada Airlines on its trans-Atlantic operations and in Delhi this week the Corporation's Managing Director. Mr Basil Smallplece, is concluding a similar arrangement for the Far East with Air India and Qantas.

PARTNERSHIP

"Only : Poldstan" among "major" Commonwealth countries now remains outside the Boac partnership scheme but I understand discussions are going on with Pakistan,

British Government policy is to obtain a closer linking of all Commonwealth airlines with common force and other operating arrangements, but the Government must tread warily in proposing that Commonwealth air links should be tled to "Buy British" aircraft policy. Many airlines have been buying American aircraft on the grounds that Britain is not producing the aircraft they need. They certainly will not be dic-tated to by Mr Sandys.—London Express Service.

Additional Telephone Directory

A "supplementary" telephone book will be issued by the Hongkong Telephone Company shortly before Chinese New Year, containing about 11,000 new numbers. The new book, it was learned from an official of the Telephone Company this morning, is to be issued to subscribers from January 23.

Of the 11,000 new listings, 6,000 will be totally new numbers of telephones which the telephone company have been busy installing throughout the Colony during the past few months. The remaining numbers will be those of subscribers who have changed addresses. "This," the official added, "is causing us a big headache for there are many house removals during the year." In the present Englishlanguage telephone directory there are more than 50,000 numbers listed, excluding those of Government. On the question of the company's development plan for more telephones and better exchange systems, the official said, "We are shead of schedule already in the first few months. In the Mongkok area we will be bringing in 2,000 more lines from December 18 onwards. These were not expected to be ready until January. "In another area, 1,000 telephones, which were not expected to be installed until March, will now be ready in January."

London, Dec. 1. The British Government is not behind suggestions reported from the Western European Assembly in Paris for a seven-nation nuclear striking force in Europe, an authoritative source said here tonight.

Such suggestions came from Parliamentarians at the Assembly and did not reflect British Government policy, the source

LOVED ROME

Catullus came from Verona, but he went to Rome. Vergit came from a village near Mantua, and he made his way to the Imperial City, Propertius left Perugin, but he loved Rome more than Perugia. Then Horace who lived right down south as far from Rome as he could be born, made his way, nevertheless, to the Capital.

Then there was the soldier poet, Tibullus who went from Pedum to the Rome of Caesar Augustus to find his destiny. Ovid, every schoolboy's friend and foe, went from Sulmona to Rome, and was happy. Gilbert Highet's love of the classics is evident in every line of his prose. He brings not only the classical background to life with vivid warming descriptions of the Italian scene, but the book is plentifully interspersed with portraits taken with his own camera.

A very fine book, a fine introduction to the classics, and for those who already know them, a lively addition to their bookshelves.—J.L.

Receiving Messages Planets?

By DELOS SMITH

New York, Dec. 1.

Two American scientists feel that we earthmen should be listening for signals from the stars. They say that creatures on some planet thousands of billions of miles away may be bombarding cosmic space with "anyonearound-besides-us?" messages.

One light year is approximately 6 trillion miles. Earth's technology is incapable of covering anything even approaching that distance. But logical reasoning suggests that creatures of another world could. Anyway, the scientists added, we do have the know-how to pick up cosmic messages of inquiry and we ought to be listening for them.

REASON Coccini and Morrison reasoned this way: our sun has planets, and so it is to be expected that other suns also have planets. Our sun supports life and a rather advanced human society on its planet, earth. Therefore, other suns could be supporting life and societies of creatures on some of their planets.

Now, if the scientists of Opera Singer Saved Gassed Man's Life London, Dec. 1.

Special.

An opera singer saved the life of a neighbour's 33-yearold son who was found lying apparently dead in bed.

The singer, Ronald Lewis, was awakened in his Stamford Hill, London, home by the man's mother. She could not rouse the son and she thought he was dead.

Mr Lewis — who is no re-lation of the actor with the same name-ran to the man's bedroom and gave him artificial respiration. A spokesman at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, where Mr Lewis is singing in Carmen at present, said that Mr Lewis managed to start the man breathing before an ambulance arrived. The man was taken to hospital where he regained consciousness some hours later. The spokesman added that dectors said the man seemed to have been gassed accidentally.— China Mail Special.

If you don't like a really dry wine, don't drink it simply because some says that the best palates accept it. I think that some of the Yugoslav wines I tasted recently were excellent. Some were very dry, some less dry and some quite sweet. It seems to me to be a good idea to buy half bottles of them, so that, at small expense, one can sample different ones and then decide which are the most suitable for one's own taste. These Yugoslav wines, all 1953 vintage, are not as inexpen-Lift the leeks up and down in sive as some other wines but they recommend themselves for their colander in changes of their purity of flavour.

As an all-round white wine to be served throughout the meal, I chose Lulomer Riesling. To serve with fish, oysters and shellfish in general, a very dry Pinot is well worth trying, if only to compare it with other dry wines of equal cost.

Tigermilk, a dessert wine, is sweeter than the others because It is made from grapes left on the vines untill they acquire a high degree of sweetness, and there is a rich red wine, Merlot, which "sweat" for a few minutes. Cut is well worth trying.
